Going plastic-free: The rise of zero-waste shops

- 1 Last year saw "zero waste" shops opened in Crickhowell in Powys, Tenby in Pembrokeshire and in Cardiff as a response to the new environmental wave against plastic. "It's a more modern way of doing an older thing," Sophie Rae, founder of Cardiff-based Ripple said. What they do to avoid the overuse of plastic
- 5 is that customers bring their own containers from home to the stores and weigh the goods they want to buy - minus the weight of the packaging. "It makes zero-waste shopping cost effective," said Ms Rae.

- In addition, people can buy much smaller quantities - for example when cooking to a recipe - which helps reduce food waste. "People come in and buy 10 grams of something because you can in our shop," said Cathy Butler who runs The Little Pantry with her husband David and their two sons in Tenby. "A teaspoon of something costs hardly anything and you are not throwing anything away."

- The shops sell a variety of dried bulk foods as well as natural beauty products and cleaning supplies which can be bought using a refill station. Some other shops also offer fresh fruit and vegetables - often organic from nearby farms - while
- 15 others encourage customers to shop plastic-free goods at local greengrocers by bringing their own reusable cloth bags.

- Robin Masefield, who runs Natural Weigh in Crickhowell, admits that organic produce is more expensive but claims his shop is on average cheaper than the
- 20 major supermarkets. "The cost of packaging plays a part," he says, "and supermarkets also charge a premium for organic"
